Pie Corbett's Rich and Diverse Reading Spine

All children should find themselves represented in stories. However, approximately only about 7% of characters in children's books represent the full scope of cultural heritages in the UK.

We may look different, our families may come from different places, but in the end we are all citizens of one world. Through reading, our experience of the world broadens. These books should find their place in the canon of every child's reading and imaginative experience.

Pie Corbett, Literacy expert

Teachers at St George's supplement the Pie Corbett reading spine with his diverse reading list and also with books from their own research in order to provide an exciting range of literature that reflects our society. We are working adding them to our class libraries. This book list enables us to expand our library with a range of captivating and inclusive stories by creators of colour. Also it enables us to provide children with stories that reflect and celebrate a wide range of heritages.
